

Revive The Hive

Where Designs Come Alive & Houses Become Homes

by Ashley Daniels

There's no place like home, and no one understands this more than the two brothers, Jason and Jonathan Bealand; who own Revive the Hive, a Myrtle Beach-based Home Remodeling Company.

Since 2019, throughout the Grand Strand these two brothers have taken home revivals seriously for their clients. Both brothers have been working in this or a similar industry off and on since

The full kitchen remodel in the Hunt residence encompassed the use of existing and new cabinetry with a custom paint scheme, quartz countertops with waterfall edge detail and a quartz accent wall. Electrical modifications for the undercabinet and recessed lighting, as well as the plumbing modifications for the new island configuration & large format floor tile throughout tied the entire project together.

The Hunts opted for a full replacement of their tile floor throughout the majority of their home in an effort to update the space and make a cohesive look throughout the remodel of the wet bar area and bathroom. Revive the Hive had the pleasure of remodeling all of this during the kitchen renovation. They opted for an angled approach of the large format tile to add visual interest to the space and add that desired WOW factor.

their teenage years starting in New Hampshire.

“With our builder’s license, together we’ve been able to accomplish a goal which encompasses all of the facets of construction,” says Jonathan, “from electrical to plumbing to framing, we can build a house from the ground up. No matter what the problem is in the house, we can tackle it, and we don’t have to necessarily work with other companies to achieve the end result. We do most of the work all in-house, which is a big accomplishment because not a lot of contractors or businesses carry all these licenses or even the proper license for the job at hand. I believe this sets us apart from most remodeling contractors.”

Their favorite projects? Bathroom remodels.

“We are very efficient at it, and it stands out, listening to our customer feedback.” says Jonathan. “We can do pretty much anything in the home, but bathrooms are our favorite because we like the fact they involve most of the mechanical trades ... electrical, plumbing, framing, drywall, painting, tiling and in some cases even HVAC. It’s nice to see a project go from old and drab to beautiful.” Past clients Carl and Idame Stine can attest to that.

“We’ve had them do several projects,” says Carl. “The first was our master bath three years ago, and then they did our laundry room, two years ago they did our guest bathroom, and starting next week, they’re going to be doing our kitchen.”

“They’ve done almost everything in our house, from hanging curtain rods, putting our flag up front, winter proofing our doors ... You name it, they’ve done it,” adds Idame.

“I would absolutely 100 percent recommend them without any reservations at all,” she adds. “I think what I was most impressed with is their work ethic. In today’s world, we don’t often see good work ethic, and these gentlemen were fantastic. They told you what time they would arrive, and they cleaned up when they were leaving at night because we were there while they were doing the renovation. They were just fantastic.” “And I just want to mention their attention to detail,” says Carl. “In our bathroom, we made our shower bigger, so the drain would have been off maybe six inches, but that wasn’t good enough for them. They broke up the concrete and moved the drain over six inches, so it would be absolutely perfect.”

To make their bathroom remodels even more perfect and seamless, the Bealand brothers offer their in-house frameless glass enclosure installations for showers.

“We found that we were doing all these showers and then we’d have to wait for a shower glass company to come out and measure, order it, and then wait another 10-15 days depending on how fast the turnover is,” says Jason. “It was also hard to find somebody who was reasonable and would meet

They did three projects for us: gutted our kitchen, remodeled our front and back porches, and they are going to renovate one of our bathrooms, they’re that good. They are 100 percent honest about everything, especially with the budget. our schedules. Many times, clients would call us back and tell us the glass company didn’t call them back, or they were still waiting on an estimate. We kept getting these types of calls back from our customers because they trusted us so much even though it was not our field at the time. We then decided to offer shower glass installation as part of our bathroom remodels.”

It’s that level of communication and trust, along with the high-quality customization and guidance Revive the Hive offers, that continue to make customers more than satisfied.

to the mission of this family-owned remodeling company firmly founded on the kind of meaningful customer service that morphs into a close bond or relationship.

“I think it’s important how Jay and I have set up this company, because it can be a very intrusive experience when you’re in somebody’s home,” says Jonathan. “It’s not like we’re just building a home and nobody’s there. We are in the home, we’re talking to the clients, we’re getting to know them, they’re getting to know us, and we are building and creating a relationship. ... We’re just wholesome people out to help the customer get what they need or desire, make an honest living and do a good job. It’s not always about money; it’s about doing good work and building relationships.

“In fact, we had a customer this morning from Alaska, who actually flew out a bunch of fresh-caught fish, salmon, squid and rock fish, for us and gave that to us today; So it’s personal, not just a business contract. We have clients who still call us years after a project to get together and go out to dinner.”

Past customer Greg Cater is still raving about his total condo remodel the brothers completed four years ago.

“They’re wonderful people, they do great work, and they are very dependable and honest,” he says. “I won’t call anybody else because they do great work, treat people nicely, show up on time, finish the job, and go the extra mile – they always did a couple of little extra things on our project, which was awesome. My wife’s a very picky person, and I am too, but we didn’t have anything to complain about.”

The Bealand brothers say they have always had a healthy working relationship since starting up Revive the Hive – even before that over the years – and they are looking to expand their team beyond their partnership and the two employees currently on staff.

“We’ve been working together for a long time. We get along well, and we know our roles. We have our typical frustrations at times because we’re brothers,” says Jason with a laugh. “But it lasts for a couple of minutes, and we get through it because this is a business that we run, we have a good relationship, and we always know that we’re going to back each other up, regardless. Our parents raised us to respect ourselves and others and we will carry this on throughout all our business adventures.”

In an effort to create a functional space between the kitchen and living room, walls were removed and load bearing beams were installed to open up the spaces between the adjacent rooms in this full living room remodel. This achieved a cohesive functioning living space perfect for entertaining and family gatherings.
